Presenting the first lecture for Spring 2013 in our Urban & Environmental Sustainability Initiative

“The Origins and Early History of the Miami- Dade County Community Relations Board”

Raymond A. Mohl, Ph.D.
Distinguished Professor of History
University of Alabama at Birmingham

Professor Mohl is a specialist in modern US urban, ethnic, and social history. He is the author, editor, or co-editor of numerous books, including Urban Policy in 20th-Century America, sections of which address the impact of highway construction on historically African-American neighborhoods like Overtown, and South of the South: Jewish Activists and the Civil Rights Movement in Miami, 1945-1960. Dr. Mohl has held three Fulbright Professorships around the world, as well as two National Endowment for the Humanities fellowships. His most recent book is Interstate: Highway Politics and Policy since 1939, co-authored with Mark H. Rose and focusing on the impact of urban expressways on American cities. He currently is completing another book on the history of race and ethnic relations in Miami, Florida, to be published by the University Press of Florida.
